1-Bureau Credit Score & Report as of 8/21/2014

Credit Scores

Your credit score is a numerical summary of the information contained in your credit report. Your Credit score here can range from 300 to 850 with higher credit scores being better. Your credit score is calculated based on the information in your credit report. The more negative information in your credit report, the lower your credit score will be. The Six Worst Credit Report Entries include charge-offs, debt collections, bankruptcy, foreclosure, tax liens, and judgments.

This credit score places you in the top 0% of the population. A lender's perspective of you is .

Personal Information

Personal information including your name, address, and place of employment is used to identify you. Previous addresses and places of employment might also be included. It's not uncommon to have variations or misspellings of your name. Most credit reporting agencies leave these variations to maintain the link between your identity and the credit information. Having different variations of your name and old addresses won't hurt your credit score as long as it's actually your information. Make sure personal information is identifying you and not someone else.

Credit Inquiries

ADDRESS

Credit inquiries list all parties who have accessed your credit report within the past two years. While your version of the credit report lists several credit inquiries, not all of these appear on the lenders' and creditors' versions. Only "hard" inquiries are shown to lenders. These are inquiries made when a lender checks your credit report to approve your credit application. Your version will also include "soft" inquiries consisting of inquiries made by lenders for promotional purposes.
